69 I would also add a compact hacksaw with a couple spare blades. A small prybar may come in handy. Now
▼ that I'm thinking of this, groups traveling together should have a designated medic, mechanic, commo, and water tech. No point in bringing duplicate specialty items.

36 This^ guy has thought this though. No kidding. Mechanic, with a tool kit to tear down and rebuild a car ▼ short of bearing and gear puller. Would all fit in an 6×6×18 inch bag.

23 I don't know that a socket set would be needed. The best thing is to adapt your kit to the mission profile.
▼ What would you use tools for? Gaining entry? Opening an escape route? Less is more. Weight kills.

- Fence cutters
- Pick set
- Small bolt cutters
- Hacksaw with metal blades
- Sillcock key
- Prybar
- Hammer
- Zip ties
- Gorilla tape
- Metal punch (glass breaker)

That's about 7-8 lbs right there.

21 Is that tool set sufficient to build gallows?

permalink parent save report block reply

▲ blacksmith21 1 months ago +20 / -0

20 If I were bringing a gallows, I would pre-build it using smaller carriage bolts and wingnuts, then

That said, if the gantry is to be used (like in this case), it will need to bear weight. In that case, I would design it so that the crossmembers fit together with a piece of rebar to hold the parts together. A falling body will exert approximately 5 times the weight of the body at the end of the drop.

I wouldn't recommend designing the gallows for Nadler weight. Just making him watch will be enough to do him in.

² For a short drop hanging, you could save a lot of weight and time by building it out of pre-threaded metal pipe from Home Depot.

It would go together like a swing set.

Moreover, something to pry up manhole and other sewer covers may be useful for improvised oubliettes.

² Why complicate things? The French got it right hundreds of years ago. Cherry-pickers are everywhere and a standard utility pole is man-rated ;)

2 Makita is assembled in china, milwaukee parent company is chinese and dewalt is built in china. If you know of other brands sold in stores people can find, by all means. So amongst the chinese shit, the harbor freight option will be the cheapest by far, which leaves money for other supplies. Im strictly speaking about people who might want to buy shit while in dc or on the way and gotta get what you have available at the time.

⁴¹ Stop buying Chinese made shit from Amazon. You idiots are funding the enemy.

▲ MastaJoda 1 months ago +16 / -1

¹⁵ Yup. Supporting terrorism

▲ AngryCanary 1 months ago +6 / -7

⁻¹ How is China funding terrorism? They're a lot more aware of the threat of Islam than the West.

Workpro is a multinational company which outsources manufacturing to China, like literally every other department store brand, even those you would call American. It's almost impossible to find tools made in America anymore, because often they are more expensive and basically the same quality. Even the ones that say made in America are usually made from "globally sourced components", which means they paid someone minimum wage in the US to assemble something made in China so they could charge a premium for it.

Buying American alone isn't enough. There aren't domestic manufacturers of any size making most of the things we need. The only way this gets fixed is if we make it easier and cheaper for things to be manufactured by small businesses in the US. That means we need to get rid of every legal and bureaucratic burden which makes producing a product expensive and risky. If you have an idea and want to make something, you should be able to buy the machines and start producing and selling it without asking anyone for permission. You shouldn't need to worry about crawling through a minefield set by patent trolls and mega-corporations who crush competitors with lawyers. If you have a better way to make something, you shouldn't have to worry about getting sued into the dirt by a large company who produces an inferior product overseas.

China didn't crush American small manufacturing, they just filled the need for manufacturing when domestic patent law and regulatory burden crushed small business here. If it were easier to produce things in America, as soon as mega-corporations went overseas there would be 100 small businesses making something similar for less here. Instead, you can't make a freaking widget without employing a lawyer, and good luck fighting through bureaucratic hell if you want to make something more complex or remotely similar to another product on the market. The things companies and trolls can patent and sue over is outrageous.

So many people have bought into our backwards laws that have crushed small business. These laws were written by mega-corporations and meant to cement monopolies and enslave us to stagnation and turn us into consumers rather than producers.

In China, you can find thousands of small manufacturers at every level of quality and professionalism making everything imaginable, not just because labor is cheaper. After all, even in China most products are produced and consumed domestically. The primary reason is because businesses are better shielded from extremely liberal patent laws, taking a lot of the legal guesswork and lawyers out of making things. The US system is only good at producing and employing lawyers. We need to simplify and abolish regulation so that our economy is designed to employ engineers rather than lawyers. Chinese businesses generally compete with each other on time to market and innovation in either production or product, and this has allowed thousands of small manufacturers room to produce. There's nothing but bureaucrats and lawyers keeping us from doing the same.

If we want to produce more as a country, we need to make it easier for more people to produce. We need to stop trying to out-China to protect backwards regulations, and laws that prevented even Americans

“How is China funding terrorism?”

As a serious answer, probably bankrolling BLM/Antifa agitator cells/insurrectionist support networks.

▼ I'd think their harboring/abetting of the Fentanyl flooding our country would be room enough, but their pursuit of the 'attack from all angles' mauling has essentially gone unchecked on the world stage since early on in the Cold War/Truman. The above-mentioned strategy was the 1990s coining by two PLA officers for the shameless/open no-holds-barred warfare China engages in that isn't sustainable unless it's one-sided/parasitic (e.g. like the British practice of press ganging/impressment - the kidnapping of maritime U.S. citizens - that started the War of 1812). Their warfronts are specifically tailored to violate 'war' conventions - relentless cyber warfare, the complete erasure between government and corporate citizens, the economic war upon individual companies outside their control, the aggressive infiltration & subversion of all sectors, cultural subversion/rot & insurrectionist cultivation, unforced military aggression, and the latest massive doozy: what was either purposeful & badly executed biochemical warfare or an accidental and maliciously harnessed viral release that was accompanied for certain by literally evil political subversions (UN puppeting/propaganda), massive coordinated media coverage in China (people 'dropping dead', people being riveted via iron bars into their homes, footage of whole cities wailing out of some post-apocalyptic hellscape - all to be followed up with a crushing economic initiative to leg sweep those nations that were affected, initiate massive buyouts and/or transfer of wealth from private individuals to favored corporations, particularly if direct Chinese investment was possible, and exploitation of the after effects to as great a degree as possible, including selling the PPE back to the Italians at an exorbitant cost that was originally gifted to them for free by the same Italians out of generosity.

So yeah. Chyna isn't invited to my birthday party to say the least.

▼ Came here to say this, fuck amazon selling out America for shit chynese "goods". And on there the it convoluted to figure out who exactly you're buying from, and mention nowhere country of origin (manufacture). Normies flock there out of convenience and retarded perks, completely ignorant to that they're feeding the monopolistic beast
